Complementary medicine (in Switzerland) 17/5/09 (this was so played down in the Media, that I only got it on 26th May!) www.swissinfo.ch

Alternative medicine was given a boost on Sunday when the electorate gave wholehearted backing to an initiative requiring complementary forms of medicine to be covered by obligatory health insurance. Alternative forms of medicine - including homeopathy and traditional Chinese medicine - are very popular in Switzerland, and approval had been expected. Final results showed a 67 per cent approval rate and the backing of all cantons.

Opponents had unsuccessfully argued that including these forms of treatment would put more financial strain on the health system. The rightwing Swiss People's Party was the only major party to reject the proposal.

Silenced, the writer who dared to say chiropractice is bogus 4 June 2009

MY COMMENT: The whole case seems to hang upon the definition of the word BOGUS. According to my Oxford dictionary it means: Spurious, sham. The definition of the word Spurious is: Not genuine, not what it purports to be. Therefore in my opinion, Simon Singh has libelled the British Chiropractors.

SCIENCE IN COURT

The scientist Simon Singh announces he is to fight a libel case to defend his claim that chiropractic methods do not cure many of the conditions that the British Chiropractic Association claimed it did on their website.

That body, that overseas chiropractic techniques in this country is suing him. It is suggested that if successful that scientists conducting peer reviews could fall foul of Britain's bizarre libel laws. (The outgoing chief justice no less has called for their reform).
