France set to liberate herbal products

01-Oct-2008 -

France has taken a step to liberalise its highly restrictive herbal regulations by issuing two national decrees that should allow for greater access to botanical supplements.

Cancer - A Cautionary Tale

by Phillip Day

'I have studied cancer for 25 years. I've given countless lectures on the subject, written books, made films, spoken to some of the most successful cancer doctors in the business...'

'Cancer is a $200 billion-a-year industry. There are more people today making a living out of cancer than are dying from it."From an economic point of view alone," one professor confided, "why would anyone ever wish to cure cancer? Millions would have to re-train."'

Hard times for America...19/10/08

Suzanne Moore

I am currently in America and though there is an election going on, I remain transfixed by the adverts. Things are really bad when most ads are for drugs, medical insurance or ways of getting out of bankruptcy.

Women are constantly weeping on TV because their beloved fathers have died and the medical bills have meant they lost their homes. Minor celebrities are continually pushing some kind of cancer drug.

There isn't a foodstuff that doesn't promise to lower your cholesterol.

One ad has a sad woman in a gym trying to work off her post-pregnancy weight but that makes her sore.

What's the answer? More painkillers. There really is a drug for almost any mood, and all legal.

My favourites, though, are for Viagra and Cialis, full of loved-up, middle-aged couples with the message 'you can always be ready'.

Forget popping the odd little blue pill. This stuff is now to be taken daily.

Yes, there are a few side effects. If combined with other drugs, your blood pressure may cause you to burst.

Vision may be lost, or as they charmingly say at the end: 'If you have an erection that lasts more than four hours, consult a physician.'
